Excerpt from Golden Bells in Convent Towers: The Story of Father Samuel and Saint Clara, 1854-1904

Since that dread hour when his intercourse with in the Garden of Paradise ceased, and he lost his power of perfect expression, man has striven to multiply and to improve his methods of communication with his fellow-beings. Nature's mightiest forces have become the slaves of his impelling desire to convey his ideas and express his emotions to another, speed ily and effectively.

It is man's craving for sympathy that creates the wish that what he feels shall be as readily and as impressively expressed as what he thinks. Language serves to conceal, rather than to express his thoughts, and fails altogether to manifest his stronger and deeper emotions.
